ELECTION FORECASTS.

Observations on Politics by an Old New Yorker.

John T. Toal Carefully Analyzes the Situation.

Senator Reilly He Says Will Lead the Ticket.

John T. Toal, the genial kindly man and obliging, conscientious Clerk to the Board of Coroners, was born in the Seventh Ward when that region was the most aristocratic in the city. He has lived within a stone's throw of his birthplace all his life. He knows almost every person in the Fourth and Sixth Assembly districts, and has a circle of friends only limited by those who know

He has been Clerk to the Coroners for twenty-one years, and in that capacity has met thousands of men. He is a cool, keen observer, and his word on political matters is given weight by his long experience.

To Mr. Toal an Evening World reporter put the query on every man's lips : " How is election going?" "To me it looks as if the Democrats would carry this State by a good old-fashioned macarry this State by a good old-fashioned majority, and that means, of course, the election of Grover Cleveland and David B. Hill."

This was Mr. Toal's reply, and he added;
"As to a difference between the strength of Cleveland and Hill. I think there is a greater difference in the imagination of the Republicans than there is in fact. The difference will be both ways, but it will be so trifling that it will not be discernible in the result.

"No Cleveland man is opposed to Hill because he is a Cleveland man, and no Hill man feels that because he is a Hill man he ought to oppose Cleveland. As in every canvass, some men like one and dislike another candidate on their party's ticket."

some men like one and dislike another can-didate or their party's ticket."

"Then you do not take any stock in the Republican talk that a deal will be made with one or other of the city factions of the Democratic party?"

"Not at all. There will be no deal. Coogan's friends may put up a deal with the Republicans, throwing their votes to Harri-son, while the Republicans bolt Erhardt for Coogan.

"The main fight in the city is between Grant and Erhardt. I do not think Hewitt has half the strength he had before the conventions, and he will be nip and tuck with Coogan for last place.

"Hewitt has offended every class of voters. Grant would get everything but for Coogan's candidacy. Col. Coogan will draw a few votes from Grant and many from Hewitt."

"Mr. Hewitt, if elected, must be elected by Republican votes. Democrats will never elect him. He dislikes Cleveland, and he has said so. He is in the field with the hope of defeating Cleveland, and the newspapers which support him do so for the same reason.

But they will find that they have reckoned without their host, for Cleveland will carry this city, this State and the nation, and there will be necessified to wait for the officers. there will be no necessity to wait for the offi-

LIFE IN THE METROPOLIS.

HERE AND THERE GLEANINGS BY "EVEN-ING WORLD" REPORTERS.

Nothing But Drunk. As an Evening World reporter was passing Forty-eighth street he saw a crowd collected around something or other. He pushed his way in, and saw a woman lying flat on her back on the sidewalk. She was a comely woman and her hands, which were stretched out at her side, were very white. Her hat had fallen off and the "Bobby" had placed it on her breast. The draggled, broken feather stood up in an amus-

A policeman stood indifferently at the woman's side, twirling his locust and occasionally husting the crowd along.

"What are you waiting here for? Be off!" he would say gruffly.

"What is the matter with the woman?" saked the reporter.

"What is the matter with the woman?" asked the reporter.
"She's paralyzed," said the cop.
"Why, did she have a fit here?"
"She's drunk, dead drunk!" returned the policeman, with some contempt. "I got her up as far as here from Forty-second street, and here she dropped and can't stir. She's a fine-looking woman, too," the officer added, with that keen appreciation of feminine charms which marks the robust police of the metropolis. police of the metropolis.

"Are you going to take her off in an ambulance?" said the reporter.

"Ambulance!" (with disdain). "A baggage wagon is what I'm waiting for."

"What is the matter with the woman?" asked a lady on the outskirts of the crowd.

"Nothing but drunk," answered her escort.

"That's all; only drunk," supplemented the policeman with professional indifference.

Their Characteristics.

Anything is enough to draw a crowd in a New York street. If one stops to see a black cat crawling along the ledge of a window, fifty will stop to see what has engaged the at tention of the one.

It was just ten years ago to-night that we moon, shining brightly on the newly fallen the night from a pair of mustached lips. She girls, five in all, were seated around the fire, talking over our plans for the future. All had expressed their wishes in regard to their future destiny except Maggie. "Come, brown eyes," cried Belle Lindon, the blue-eyed beauty of our flock, " tell us

That evening we had planned a midnight visit to the graveyard, in defiance of all the snow, cast a dazzling radiance on all surrounding objects, and just beyond us the graveyard could be seen, clad in its pure mantle of virgin snow. Everything seemed

This was the beginning of an acquaintance mantle of virgin snow. Everything seemed propitious, and as the church clock struck 11, its warning tones breaking the deep stillness, we stood equipped with shawls, manwhat you intend to do with yourself in the tles, and so forth, at the private gate leading out upon the road. It had been fastened, but we climbed the low railing with little difficulty, and at last stood in the road.

This was the beginning of an acquaintance which ripened into intimacy between Maggie and the stranger. He was about thirty years old, but looked much, younger and was the handsomest man I ever saw; but there was a treacherous look in the blue eve and a sarcastic curl to the chiselled lips that f did not exactly like. But Maggie was infatuated and my little influence over her was entirely gone. He seemed to have no occupation, but plenty of time and money and we naturally plenty of time and money, and we naturally concluded that he was wealthy; but, strange to say, her parents strenuously opposed the match. One evening I thought she acted very after wandering about we each selected our stone and read our fortunes until tired, and then, chasing about in our wild glee, pelted each other with snowballs until the bell pealing from the tower warned us that midnight was at hand.

With one accord we started for the gate, when Maggie ran right unto a call of the gate, when Maggie ran right unto a call of the gate.
